

LIFESTYLE / RESTAURANTS

feedme

What to expect when dining out at Long Island restaurants during Phase 3

Gatsby's Landing in Roslyn will have new booths installed in the dining room. Credit: Daniel Brennan

By Corin Hirsch

corin.hirsch@newsday.com

Updated June 23, 2020 4:13 PM

PRINT SHARE

Restaurants take another leap forward Wednesday, reopening indoor dining rooms for the first time since March 16. Phase 3 of Long Island's reopening arrives about 14 weeks since diners last walked out of restaurants, and is both a relief and a puzzle for many operators.

Expect to encounter inventive seating arrangements — and a few interior face-lifts.

Glenn Falcone, owner of Gatsby's Landing in Roslyn, is waiting on the delivery of what he called "Hollywood dining booths," customized to match his décor. "They're almost like an oval, and they're more enclosed for everyone," he said. A few can accommodate 8 to 10 people, he added, and together, they will seat 34 people in all — a significant slice of the 52 indoor seats Gatsby's will have inside at half capacity. "I'm also waiting on a quote for partitions," Falcone said, that will be made of acrylic.